THE CASE OF WYATT.—The Carson Valley News which came to hand last evening makes a statement of the facts concerning the sudden death of W. G. Wyatt, from which we extract as follows: "He left Cradlebaugh's Thursday morning about 9 o'clock to go to Chas Taylor's ranch, Pine-nut, with a letter to Taylor from Cradlebaugh. He seemed to be in his usual state of mind. Was found in the corner of the fence inside the pasture, a short distance this side of Cradlebaugh's, last Saturday night. Tracks showed that he had walked from the road to the fence, a few rods distant, set his cane over and leaned it against the fence on the inside, as though he designed climbing over. The supposition is that when he reached the top of the fence he was attacked with vertigo, induced by a chronic disease of the brain, and fell headlong to the ground. There were a few slight scratches on the head, and some signs of blood in the mouth. The marks in the sand on which he was lying showed signs of terrible convulsions. The body was first discovered late Saturday evening. The Coroner took charge of the body next morning and summoned a jury of inquest. An empty vial was found in his pocket, and the first presumption was that he had committed suicide by taking poison. A chemical test of the few remaining drops in the bottle was sufficient, however, to satisfy the jury that such was not the case, and a post mortem examination was demanded.

GENERAL GRANT can't make a speech. Mayor Belknap of Virginia City can, but if he is correctly reported by last evening's Chronicle, he can't make a good one. Upon taking his seat upon the municipal throne of the Hornet Corporation his Honor acquitted himself sensibly but not with exceptional brilliancy, as follows: "Municipal government, he said, was the representative of Republican institutions, and although founded in wisdom, such governments had many disadvantages. Unless great care was exercised abuses were liable to creep in and the public moneys be expended in extravagance. The unearthing of fraud in some cities of the Union during the past few years had created distrust of public officials, which had caused the best citizens to abandon all participation in governmental affairs; but a new light had dawned upon the people, and there was now no reason why good citizens should not take hold and manage municipal affairs. A grave responsibility rested upon them. This city was being sorely tried just now, and its affairs demanded the exercise of as much care from those entrusted with them as their private affairs did. If they exercised due diligence they might not be able to please everybody, but when they resigned their offices they would at least have the consciousness of having served their constituents to the best of their ability."

The drifts which, according to the mining reporter of the Gold Hill News, are "steadily advancing" in the Comstock mines, are alarmingly abundant. Wouldn't it be well to vary the expression a bit, now and then?

HON. JOHN A. McQUAID will address the Buckeye Club of Virginia City to-night.

BROKE HIS LEG.—The Reno Journal of Wednesday has the following account of an accident:

Yesterday afternoon Mr. Leahy, boarding-house keeper at the new-mill, Mackay-Fair's camp, met with a misfortune in breaking his leg. He was on top of the house fixing the stove-pipe, slipped and fell to the ground with sufficient force to cause the result above stated. Dr. Dawson was sent for and went up last evening to render assistance.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Our late distinguished fellow citizen, Hon. Charles H. Bryan, was buried yesterday from the Ormsby County Court House. The remains were followed to the place of interment by the Justices of the Supreme Court, the Attorney General and other members of the State Government, also by representatives of Ormsby, Storey and Washoe county bars and by citizens in carriages and on foot. Tender hands had woven a wreath of flowers and placed it upon the coffin, and the impressive burial service of the Episcopal church was read over the open grave by Rev H. L. Foote. He sleeps in the grave-yard by whose gate lie the remains of that other Ohioan, the late John C. James. We notice a massive sand-stone monument at the head of John's resting-place. Inscribed upon it are these words:

Gentle in manners,
In action resolute.

This is well and truly said. It will gratify his multitude of friends to know that it is there.... If we were the man or the set of men who are in authority over you Square, we should regret that we had not seen fit to sow the same with grass seed sufficiently early in this present season for it to have received the blessing of the rains which have been poured out, these late days and nights from the hand of a bountiful and special Providence. Indeed, we do not believe that it is too late even now, to do some profitable planting there. Indeed, also, we do not know that we should feel called upon to shoot or otherwise assault, mutilate or destroy any midnight fellow citizen or citizens who might, could, would, or should be detected in the act of sprinkling the same with the seed of the blue-grass, the white-clover, the red-top, the lawn-grass or the fragrant timothy, or the same mixed judiciously in properly adjusted proportions. Possibly those whose duty it is to cultivate and adorn these grounds would wink a sly, sagacious wink, or laugh a laugh of self-satisfaction in the sleeve of 'em over so considerable an item of expense saved and gratuitously incurred. And this consideration may act as a deterrent and prevent the midnight excursion that we have hinted at. But if our poor councils would avail we would say plant, and plant at once. Act, act in the living present, seed in the loan and rain o'er head.... Some of the first Spring croppings of the Wheeler exploring expedition as it is to be renewed are manifest in the presence of Lieut. W. W. Wotherspoon who got here yesterday from Camp Independence. He came in with some animals for the said expedition. He reports some rough weather on the mountains between here and Independence. What number of men accompanied him we neglected to ascertain. Farmer Treadway is the temporary custodian of the animals.... North Carson street, beyond Fryer's wine house is sadly in need of some repairs. Especially is the drainage in a shocking plight. Whenever the waters of Treadway Creek are diverted into the gullies and ditches thereabout, great pools and puddles are formed, and they bid fair to stagnate into unsightly reservoirs of green, scum and wide and deep receptacles of all the garbage and rubbish of the neighborhood. Great breeders of all febrile diseases, these vats of uncleanness; also they generate fleas and flies and all the busier and more vicious insects of the night. If there can be devised any practicable plan for the drainage or filling of these nasty ponds much will be done to avert an accumulation of malarious gases, unpleasant to anticipate and poisonous to breathe.... Everybody agrees that this is the most copious May rainfall seen here since '60. Certainly no later comer has seen the like. We look for wide-spread good results hereabout among the farmers and gardeners. As to the rivers, we should say they were in the way of receiving a good deal of present increase of water as well as a reserve store for future use. For what is rain in the valleys is snow on the mountains.... We understand from Mr. Musgrove that the tunnel for tapping Marlette Lake is about completed. Indeed we are not sure but the water has already been let in to that conduit. Should go up and see but for poverty, laziness and many infirmities. Also one can see water works enough nearer this present altitude. Without some unlooked for hydraulic pressure will stay at this level and eke out such contentment as is doled in the Valley of Sloth.... A claybank mustang with a surprising talent for kicking with both hind heels at once, even while in transitu, was an event having intimate relationship to a wood-wagon of our observing yesterday. A rustic youngster on the seat, chief engineer of the laden wagon and the span of which claybank was one. The lad would dally with his blacksnake about the beast's crupper when down would go the runty brute's ears and up would fly his heels, like fury. There did not seem to be any immediate damage ensuing. The kicks were vented on certain projections of cord-wood, rattling as they struck with a not unamusing series of thumps. The boy seemed to be taking in a certain amount of diversion with his toil, and the horse was far from objecting. Altogether the occurrence was well calculated to relieve the too painful monotony of this period of business depression.... Senator Boardman of Washoe was in the city yesterday. Also Hon. Tom Hayden of Reno. The latter came here to attend the obsequies of the late Judge Bryan. Also Councillor Stonehill of Virginia attended those sad ceremonies.

If a thorough salting will help a lie to keep, as it does beef and buffalo-tongues, this whopper by the Reveille ought to last as long as any sugar-cured ham.

Uncle John Gibbons, M. S. L. C., and driver of the Belmont stage, says that for the circumference of a mile around the Smoke Valley salt works the air is full of fine particles of salt, giving the appearance of a snow storm. He avers that when the ranchers want salt for household and dairy use they just go out and set a sack in the salt shower and obtain what they require in a few moments. He also states that the saline impregnated atmosphere is a sure cure for rheumatism. He knows a man who was so crippled with rheumatism as to have no use of his limbs, and who walked thirty miles to get in range of the salt air; and in fifteen minutes after it first struck his lungs he held four jacks against an "ace full."
